A tragic accident at work

The death of Fabio Correale, a 37-year-old worker, has shocked the community of Crotone. The accident occurred on November 10, when the man lost his life in the hold of a ship docked at the port. The Public Prosecutor's Office has opened a case against unknown persons, assuming the crime of manslaughter. The investigation has been entrusted to the Port Authority, which is now trying to clarify the circumstances that led to this tragic fatality.

Investigations underway and autopsy

Initially, it was assumed that Correale's death was due to illness, but the autopsy results revealed elements that would exclude natural causes. Investigators are maintaining the utmost confidentiality on the details that have emerged, but it is clear that several hypotheses are being evaluated. Among these, poisoning by gases produced by biomass has been excluded, but other causes are still being examined. The tests related to the autopsy are essential to understand the real causes of death and the results will be delivered to the Prosecutor's Office within 60 days.

A touching funeral

Today, the community paid tribute to Fabio Correale at his funeral, held in the church of San Paolo a Tufolo. Hundreds of people attended, demonstrating how much he was loved and respected. His death is not only a personal tragedy, but a call to attention to workplace safety, a topic that continues to be of great relevance in Italy. The ongoing investigations could lead to important developments, but in the meantime, Correale's family and friends mourn his untimely passing.
